Faux Flower Monogram on the wall

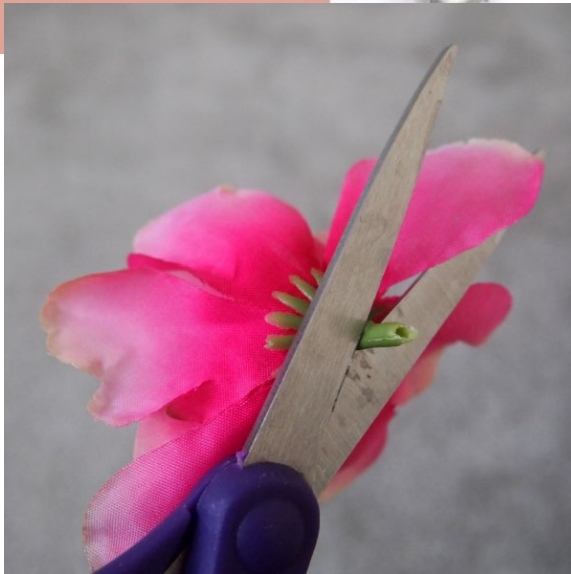

PURCHASE FLOWERS AND FOAM BOARD AT DOLLAR TREE

MATERIALS:

- foam board
- utility knife
- glue gun (+ glue)
- ruler
- pencil
- scissors
- faux flowers

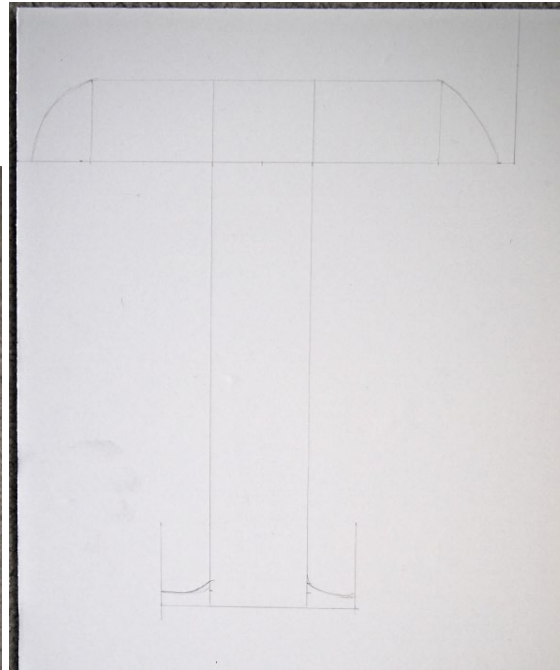

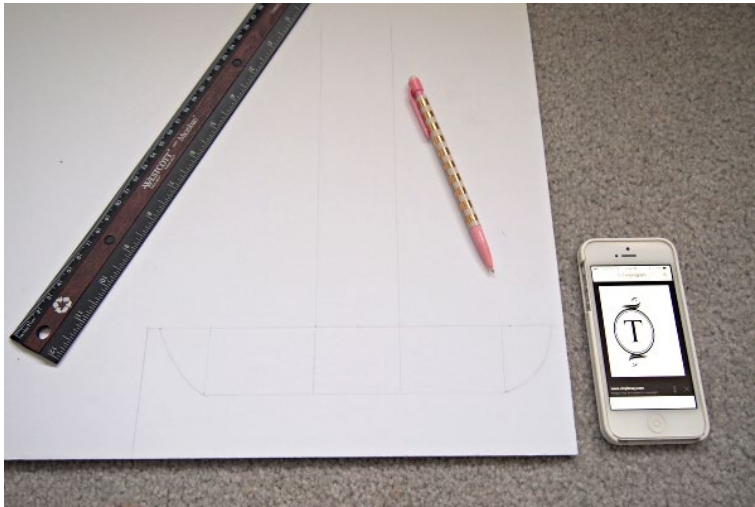

The foam board is the stuff you might remember using for school projects, and believe me, cardboard would have worked just as well – I just didn't have any! The flowers are completely up to your taste. I chose an array of mixed pink and white flowers with a hint of yellow, because I made this for a friend, and I knew those colors would work in her space. To begin, remove the flowers from their faux stems and put them all together, like so:

You will also want to cut the little plastic knobs off of the flowers, as close to the petals as possible for gluing. This is fairly easy because you're just cutting through plastic, and there are no wires to get through like on the stems.

Now, pick a letter. Any letter! Ok, not any letter... one that means something to you, like the first letter of your last name, or first name. I chose a simple "T" after a quick Google search and started sketching on the foamboard. I did measure quite a bit, but you're not going for perfection here, so don't worry too much.

Cutting the letter is best done with a utility knife and a ruler so you get the straight edges as straight as possible. I did use scissors for the curved parts, though.

See? The edges aren't perfect. No big deal, because they're about to be covered up anyway!

Plug in your glue gun and get ready for the fun part! Start placing the larger flowers on first—that way you can fill in the smaller gaps with smaller flowers.

Here's a close-up shot of the progress. You can see I didn't plan this out too much. Just go with it and have fun! The edges will eventually be pretty well hidden. The nice thing about using foam board is that if they peek through, it's not so bad, because they're nice white edges.

Be careful with the glue gun! I totally burned myself during this project and I do not want you to do the same! Applying glue to the board is better than on the flower. Seriously!
Here is the finished product:
